A LONG, STRANGE JOURNEY TOWARD A RETROSPECTIVELY INEVITABLE DESTINATION

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 03, 2009

Alexis Tioseco (1981–2009) and Nika Bohinc (1979–2009)

By Keith Uhlich

I should preface this by saying that I had never heard of film critics Nika Bohinc or Alexis Tioseco before today. And yet it seems only right to make note of their passing, in no small part because of the tributes from Gabe Klinger at the Auteurs Notebook, Kim Voynar at Voynaristic and Jonathan Rosenbaum at his personal site. (UPDATE: Noel Vera has also posted a piece at Critic After Dark.) The details of their deaths are horrible: The two of them interrupted some burglars in their Manila home and were shot multiple times. In life, so I now glean, they were colleagues and fellow cinema advocates, and I'm saddened that we'll never have the chance to meet. One of my deep-held beliefs is the importance of building community—I think this is one way the respective art forms we practice, however beleaguered at times, will perpetuate and thrive. To Nika and Alexis: I did not know either of you here, but I hope our contributors, our readers and I can help to honor your memories. Good places to start are the remembrances above, as well as Criticine, a site that Alexis founded. More recommendations and recollections are welcome in the comments section.

This story has a sad ending, but it's beautiful. Thanks for calling it to our attention, Keith. And my condolences to Alexis and Nika's families and friends. It sounds as if theirs was a meeting of true minds.

I hadn't heard of them until now...but I don't think I'll ever be able to forget them. Alexis' essay on Philippine cinema (which Gabe Klinger links to) is one of the most impassioned and beautiful pieces on film I've ever read. Unbelievably sad.

We live almost next door to them and never knew how much he has done for cinema in Asia (specially the Philippines) until I saw the Che-che Lazaro's tribute on ANC TV Media on Focus. A great loss to better film in my country.

Nika and Alexis will surely be missed. Let us not forget them in our prayers for their eternal peace and justice for their death.
